LOST HIS FOOT.

D. C. Woolverton Demands $15,000 from the Union Pacific.

DeWitt C. Woolverton filed a $15,000 damage suit against the Union Pacific railway company.

The plaintiff alleges that on Oct. 13, 1892, while passing from a caboose near the depot in this city, to the office of defendants, he was run against by an engine, thrown under the wheels and so badly injured that the ampution of a foot was necessary. He further alleges that the engine was being handled by a hostler at the time of the accident, and that the latter had not the skill and ability to properly bandle the same; also that the engine was going at a dangerous and reckless rate of speed. Negligence is claimed on the part of the company, and the plaintiff bases his claims for recovery on that ground. E. W. Tatlock is the plaintiff's attorney. The plaintiff alleges that on Oct. 13,
